By MISS HUBBACK.
(Niece of Miss Austen.) author of "The Wife's Sister," &c.
The popularity of Miss Austen was founded not so much op the fact that she wrate good novelv, as that under the guize of fiction, and in a most pleasing strain, she inculcated end cultivated the best feelings of our nature, and held up to set view, and also to our diagray, traits of character which retuder as disagrecable to extractive and others. Her niece (hins Hubback) seems to have been brought up in the same school and with equal ability pursues the same end. Her clip of seems to be to write that which, introduced into our tablics, and have an excellent tendency of furthering the constitution of on deagaters, while at the same time, being written wire endreaths ability, and in a most interesting and pleasing style, it cannot but prove highly entertaining.

"Kate Penrose," her last story, is written with great spirit, and be autifully portrayes the dangers which beset the young and a experienced on their entert in life; and shows to what lengths the the hypocrate will descend to mask his villainy and decrive the unwary.
